quarantines. Maine, Alaska and Vermont have some version of a testing alternative.

In "Vacationland," as Maine dubs itself, Democratic Gov. Janet Mills thought she was doing the tourism industry a favor by providing an alternative to the 14-day quarantine. Visitors can skip the quarantine if they can show they've tested negative for the virus within 72 hours before arrival.

Some innkeepers and restaurateurs complain the measure falls short of what is needed to attract tourists and salvage their summer season.

"We don't think visitors are going to jump through hoops like that. They'll just choose another destination," said Steve Hewins from HospitalityMaine, the state's tourism trade group.

Hawaii Gov. David Ige extended the state's mandatory two-week quarantine for all arriving travelers, even as the state scrambles to produce a screening process that could allow some travelers to return.

In Florida, which has recently seen a spike in cases, visitors from New Jersey, New York and Connecticut are required to quarantine. New York, meanwhile, is considering requiring Florida visitors to quarantine.

Travelers to Alaska who are tested upon arrival are allowed to avoid further quarantine if they test negative. But they're encouraged to limit their activities until they obtain a second negative test result.

In Vermont, visitors can cut short the two-week quarantine if they get a test after a week that comes back negative.

"There is pent-up demand, people are wanting to come to the state," so anything to help travelers plan and reduce their burden is a good thing, said Tim Piper, president of the Vermont Inn and Bed and Breakfast Association.

New Hampshire is requiring out-of-staters to attest to having quarantined at home for 14 days before staying at a hotel or other lodging property. That idea was adopted after the state rejected the idea of forcing visitors to quarantine.

Safety concerns are real in Maine, the state with the nation's oldest population. Maine has seen among the fewest cases of all states to date, recording 102 COVID-19-related deaths and 2,878 cases overall.

Maine, which touts its lobster, lighthouses and rocky shore as attractions, depends heavily on tourism. Its population of 1.3 million swells with 37 million visitors during a typical year.

Visitors can avoid a quarantine by being tested before they arrive, or can reduce the quarantine duration by being tested after arrival. But the state is encouraging visitors to be tested before arrival, and "before you go." Vermont and New Hampshire residents are exempted from the rule.

Maine innkeepers say the tests are burdensome because they're potentially costly — and not readily available.

At the Cod Cove, owner Ted Hugger questions whether out-of-staters pony up for the tests, which cost $150 if paid out of pocket. He also questioned whether tests will keep people away since those 18 and younger and traveling with adults are exempt.

"It just doesn't make sense," he said. "It's a viable option."

Jeremiah Hawkins, 70, New York, said the challenge may make him rethink his August visit to the Maine coast. He said it's not easy to get tests, especially within a 72-hour window before arrival.

"It's draconian," said a retired film executive. "It

Petition to Extend Water Service Area in the Town of Rollinsford
Summary of Order Nisi No. 26,367 Granting Extension of Water Service Area
June 17, 2020

On June 17, 2020, the Commission granted the City of Dover's Petition to Extend Water Service to 7 Hall Street, Rollinsford, New Hampshire. The Commission's Order, Dover's petition, Staff's recommendation, and other docket filings, other than any information for which confidential treatment is requested or granted by the Commission, are posted at <https://www.puc.nh.gov/Regulatory/Docketbk/2018/18-187.html>.

The Commission found that the City of Dover possesses the managerial, technical, and financial capabilities to provide water service, and the franchise extension is for the public good. The Commission delayed the effectiveness of its approval to ensure that the public receives notice of the Commission's determination and has an opportunity to request a hearing. Persons interested in responding to the Commission's action may submit their comments, or file a written request for a hearing that states the reason and basis for a hearing, no later than July 6, 2020. Any person(s) responding to such comments and requests for hearing shall do so no later than July 10, 2020. Following consideration of any comments and requests for hearing received, the Commission may further extend the final effective date of its Order. Unless the Commission orders otherwise, the Order shall become final and effective on July 17, 2020.
